Building Name: The Atlantic Hotel
Public/Private Access

Date: 1896

Description:

The Atlantic Hotel is located on the westerly side of N. Main Street in the apex of intersecting Broad, Jefferson, and Main Streets. Originally the hotel was a rectangular, 3-story building with regular 1/1 windows throughout and at various times a front porch with balcony or front awning. Before the hotel once lay a small entrance park.

Alterations and additions to the hotel have radically changed its appearance. In 1946 a mixed 1 and 2-story section addition was constructed to the front of the hotel where the carriage approach had been. Another addition to the hotel, evidenced by an interruption in the bonding and brick color, expanded the southwest wall further west.

Architectural embellishments in the form of stamped sheet metal work remain on the building. A bracketed modillion cornice with center and corner pediments and egg and dart moulding decorates the roof line. Metal hood moulds with rosettes are fastened over each window of the primary facade.

The 1946 addition brought plate glass show windows and pivoting sash windows to the building. The 2-story center block has a balcony with a corrugated fiberglass awning. Flared appendages to this block conform to the street pattern of Jefferson and Broad Streets. Decorations of the addition include a panel frieze of a checkerboard pattern stretchers and bands of stretchers forming a string course and window and door surrounds. The building is presently in good condition.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Atlantic Hotel contributes a sense of scale, original design and materials to the commercial district. Three stories tall, the brick building has undergone modification that has diminished but not entirely erased evidence of its 19th century character. The presence of that character is a bridge between the two blocks separated by the hotel thus continuing the visual integrity of the westerly side of Main Street.

5. Description of physical appearance:

The Atlantic Hotel is a three story brick masonry structure which faces east from the west side of South Main Street in Berlin, Md. The structure was built in three primary stages.

The main block, a rectangular brick building constructed in running bond, and a flat roof was constructed in 1896 after one of Berlin's three major fires. The building is ten bays wide and three bays deep. The front facade of the main block is characterized by a large pressed metal bracketted cornice, the north and south corners of the east elevation are set on a diagonal. Pressed metal pediments extend above the cornice line on the north and south diagonal corners and in the center of the structure. The center pediment is stamped, "1896 Atlantic Hotel."

Pressed metal hood moldings decorated with a center flower motif are located over each window opening on the front facade. Occupying each bay on the front facade which is not covered by the 1946 addition is a double hung wooden 1/1 sash. Originally a small balcony with iron rail was located in the center of the front facade.

The south elevation of the main block is three bays wide. Occupying the bays on second and third level are segmental arched window openings with 1/1 double hung sash. Located in the second bay on the first level is a wide three part window with three

6. Statement of significance:

The Atlantic Hotel contributes to the Berlin Commercial Historic District as an example of late nineteenth century architecture which retains many significant features found throughout the district. These features include, but are not limited to, ornate pressed metal cornices and window hood moldings, brick masonry construction, arched window openings on the side and rear facades, a large stained glass window on the south side and flat roof construction. The character of the building has been hidden by an inappropriate 1946 addition on the front facade which will be removed during the rehabilitation by the Town of Berlin. Fortunately, few of the original window and door openings on the front facade have been altered and therefore the character of the building has not been irreversibly compromised.

The building has been one of the most important commercial buildings in this small community serving as a social center of the town. The building housed a saloon, restaurant, and rooms providing a central location for town activities for almost fifty years. The building is one of few in the central commercial district which survived the fires of 1902 and 1904 and was built in 1896 immediately following the 1895 fire.

pair of double hung sash. The side windows are 9/1 sash. The center window is 12/1 sash. The windows are separated by square engaged columns. An ornate stained glass window is located in the arched transom over the windows.

Flanking either side of this window are plain two panel entrance doors with lights and single light transom in a segmental arched entranceway.

The rear (west) elevation of the main block is seven bays wide. Occupying the window bays on the south end of the third level are segmented arched window openings and square openings on the north end. The windows occupying these bays are a mixture of 1/1 and 2/1 windows.

A rebuilt two story frame and metal pipe porch extends along the second level. The porch is supported by metal pipe columns and contains a straight picket railing. A portion of the porch rail is believed to be the rail from the original front balcony. The first level of the porch is enclosed with plywood and old windows and cinder block. Each bay on the porch is occupied by an original window or door opening. A three story brick addition constructed c. 1930 extends four bays deep and three bays wide to the rear of the south end of the main block. Distinguishing features of the addition are diagonal corners at the south end of the building, double hung 2/2 sash are located in the arched window openings, and a repeating pattern of small and large windows on the north and south walls.

A major addition was added to the front of the building in 1946. This set of one and two story brick structures detracts substantially from the historic character of the Atlantic Hotel. The structures were built on the original location of the landscaped gardens and front drive of the hotel. The structures are characterized by large aluminum show windows and jalousy windows and a large tin awning which extends from the second level.

Fortunately, although portions of the front facade of the original main block of the building have been stuccoed, no new masonry openings between the front facade of the main block and the new addition were added.

The interior of the building is in fair to poor condition due to structural failure and water damage. The roof of the main block on the north end was blown off in 1985, many of the windows were broken and there is now standing water on the second and third floor. Structural members were removed from the first floor causing severe settling.

The original entrance to the main block has remained intact and leads to a main entrance hall. The main entrance is characterized by an open staircase which rises to the third level along the north wall of the hallway. Flanking the main stair hall is the dining room on the south which contains an archway and lobby and bar areas which was divided into offices c. 1950. The north end of the first level contains most of an original pressed ceiling. The second and third levels of the main block contains banks of hotel rooms along the east and west sides of the building flanking a hall way
